For whatever reasons the Kensington Runestone's authenticity is still being debated. Certainly some of those reasons are motivated by the usual unwillingness of people to leave behind egotism in search of the deep. At any rate, the author of this weekly astral zine has the objective of strengthening our collective search for the unknown. Now let us take a look at the Kensington Runestone:

Since clairvoyance is an art with several difficulties, it is the assurance of accuracy when a reading shows you beforehand what the documented facts contain. In other words, in the case of this reading, the author decoded the message of the stone (since it is not that old, it was easy to pinpoint) and then only later looked on the internet to find it was verified. It may be better to approach readings this way, but similar to a jury who already has information on the presented case, many times the background and details of a given subject of psychic study is already in the public consciousness.

The findings about the Kensington Runestone were very affirmative. It is a real artifact. Maybe the controversy over this artifact is how it can disturb some of the status quo. Yes the Vikings were great explorers, wisemen and artists and according to the Vinland Saga made their way to America half a century before the “discovery” of the continent of the popularized textbook persona. Not much is known about the Vikings' stay in America, if they left completely or possibly made homes and families here. With real clairvoyance, it is not hit and miss, we now have direct access to the subtle akashic realm where the astral plane is aggregated into unified power. There is no book in the sky you read to get access to the records of the universe, or at least, our planetary habitation.

The Kensington Runestone, in the opinion of the author, was written and created for friends while the group was hoping their luck would change. They were on an expedition. They were stranded and lonely. They were not going back. They created these stones as communication symbols or signs intended for their colleagues on the journey. It is very sensible indeed. Imagine how they felt being in such a far away land. Certainly they would have been happy to talk to anyone. This means other Vikings were out there traveling. In a desperate situation, knowing the spirit of the Vikings, there was always hope they might have seen someone. If you read the Vinland Saga, the natives were not always friendly and it wouldn't have been them they were desiring to see. Yes, they stayed in good spirits even in a bad situation. They probably wanted to reconnect with the other travelers, get supplies and food in order to be able to start the trek backwards to Canada or maybe even to Iceland. Some of those details are unnecessary for the impression found here. Many conclusions can be drawn without the use of psychic energy because each clairvoyant knows there are too many things to consider and each and every reading takes a certain amount of personal subtle focus that is not good to over-exert, but at times one will do so for the right reasons. The most important factor of this finding, is that it backs up the inscription of the stone and it may help to restore the true history of the Vikings in America and give credit where credit is applicable.

Σ Do you need to be told the truth about every unsolved mystery of the earth and beyond? Assuredly there are living beings who know all truths from fictions, but have people reached the point in their spiritual progress that every unknown mystery of our planet should be divulged? Is humankind, as the little brother/sister of the cosmos prepared to once again take that plunge into pure science? Even if there is blindness in faith or in believing, is there some kindness in leaving certain things unannounced as to their origins? Maybe so...

The occult is the study of the unknown in its exactitude. Take for instance the extraterrestrial obsession common in today's world. As a theosophist, classical magician or occultist, is it fortunate of humankind to take an interest in the spirits of the other worlds? Or is this obsessive interest being taken too seriously as an ultimatum? In plainer terms, will people be continually misled by the phenomenal universe, further walking down a path of distraction or will they learn to maintain the quest of ultimate salvation while the phenomenal world goes through its change? It is not clear. When Santa Claus no longer could entertain the peoples' fancy, even though he was and is very real (remember, Santa=Odin or Santa=Satan) as he was connected to the mysticism of the Amanita Muscaria Vedic tradition. Many spirits exist above and also terrestrially. Sadly there is no evidence that meeting extraterrestrials will lead to a knowledge of the Higher Self, the True Inner Sun, the One Truth.

Another interesting clairvoyant study that came the way of the author of this zine recently was the large, mysterious stone balls found around Costa Rica called the Diquis Delta Balls.

According to the author's findings these balls cannot be a hoax at all. The men who made these balls were as big as a house--around 12 feet tall. These balls were the giants' olympics! They made a game of it. The spectators pushed them and cheered them on. This was a competition among the giants to see how far the competitors could throw them. This could have taken place millions of years ago. They had great personalities and enjoyed life as much as we do.

Recently there was media coverage of a mysterious unexplained finding in the Arizona desert. Someone discovered a cluster of shiny purple spheres that were grouped together sitting in the sand. They appeared to be around one or two inches in diameter and the overall cluster was a couple yards across. Not much insight was gained from the media report. They took the usual route with the story, taking a phenomenal occurrence and somehow making it even less exciting than the common person would see it. However there is still quite an interest surrounding the spheres to be found on "the com."

The author has conducted a simplistic astral reading upon this subject with very important results. The mysterious purple spheroids are some kind of life form. They grew or emerged. They have the density of water. Something might hatch from it. They have no brain, no eyes. They are unknown about. It is an animal in a sense similar to sponges being considered animals in our definition. Wow, the infinite force of life has manifested in this case, similar to sea life, yet isolated in the Arizona desert. The earth is a tremendously fertile place and we should remember to use less plastic, styrofoam and pollutants as much as possible. Protect our world, increase awareness and reconsider every thing thrown out since all we have comes from earth and goes back to her. These spherical creatures did not consult the science textbooks before appearing, because if they do eventually receive their proper study and classification, it might be found out that they broke the rules of limited present-day zoology that does not have noumenal generalizations.

Changing courses, let's turn our attention to the skies. Flying humanoids. Some are alien/ET and some are secret military equipment. How do you know which is which? It's not so easy. The Tarot is one place to begin because it is the exact representation of the mental universe. When you differentiate from one kind of thing to another, it makes a great difference in how you perceive these phenomena. Without Tarot, one could eventually fall off the deep end because of a lack of spiritual, adept knowledge of humanity and the surrounding immediate globe. There is no definite knowledge of how advanced these humans or "human-oids" really and who they serve or patrol. Now let us look at

The occult findings are as follows: They come here in craft and get out and fly around. There is a sphere we do not see that surrounds him. There is a capsule we do not see here. It is invisibilized with a harness. He is wearing something and it has an energy field. He probably has a ray gun. This is a really strong reading (as the author's notes indicate). Their technology we witness here may use a gravitational, polar alignment with the earth center. They come from a massive colony and they seem aggressive granted their position in the reality. From the author's dowsing work on this subject, they seem to be from the moon of Saturn, probably Iapetus.

DUE TO THE PATIENT NATURE OF THE WORK, ALL FINDINGS ARE REVISABLE, UPDATABLE, AND POTENTIALLY EVOLVING
